

College changes you, and you find who you really are and what you want in life. College is an eye-opening experience, and you really have to discover what you came to college for. For me, it was my education and furthering it to the best of my ability.

My grades have been better in college than in high school. Listen to your teachers and come to class, and you will be successful.

Successes

I have worked on paying attention since day one, and it finally has gotten to a point where I find class more fun and interesting - I go into class craving new information. Always go to class excited to learn. Things stick better.

Successes

I never had to put too much effort into my schooling, so I was nervous it would all be too much and I would shut down. I am proud of my academic success, but I am prouder of my personal success and how much I have evolved. I am the best version of myself that I think I have ever been. And I am proud of that.

I actually crushed it.

Successes

My best day is a day that I feel most successful. It's when I become so productive and do all the tasks I'm supposed to finish that day. Being productive makes me feel very satisfied and happy. As a student, I think taking advantage of time and making the most of our effort and energy on the right things make up the best day.

I ended up passing biology with C, the first one in my entire life. I learned a lot and not just about biology. I learned to change my study style, I learned to get help, I learned that I cannot do everything on my own, and I learned a lot from that experience. And now, I have decided to retake the class during summer, so I can prove to myself that everything I have learned and the experience is worth it.
